1. The suggested rule stated in paragraph 3 of referenced dispatch is consistent with Headquarters thinking and, therefore, is approved. As a matter of general practice Headquarters has considered this authority as being inherent in the Regulatory System, and issuances are intentionally silent on any further delegation of authority except where such authority is not to be further delegated. This avoids the inclusion of unnecessary repetitive language which we are constantly striving to keep out of Regulatory issuances.

2. Regarding the point you raised on [REDACTED] 25X1A
issuances are developed with the typical field station in mind where there is only one Deputy. It would not be practical to spell out in each issuance exceptions or modifications for those few stations that have more than one Deputy. Exceptions, however, can be made, and, if limiting the approval of overtime to yourself and your general Deputy tends to create management problems, you may treat this dispatch as authority to delegate the approval of overtime to the Deputy for Operations and the Deputy for Support for personnel under their respective jurisdictions. This may sound somewhat bureaucratic since your general Deputy and Deputy for Operations are one and the same individual. Organizationally, however, these are separate positions, and should be so treated in the formal delegation of authority. From a practical standpoint, this does nothing more than extend authority to the Deputy for Support to approve overtime for those employees under his jurisdiction.

3. Should there be other instances where authorities are limited to the Chief of Station and a single Deputy, and such limitations appear to
